"I Hope You Know"

What has it cost you? Her world is defined by room numbers, meal times, therapy, events and activities all of which are scheduled for her by nurses, coordinators, and therapists. Her job is to live, to come and to go. Her purpose, some might say in the cynics view, has passed from this place. The Lord's Day came, and she was there with the others gathered. It was time to "lay by in store" as her soul had prospered. Her sacrifice, not of legal tender to settle all debts public or private, but of paper "money" (you might call it Monopoly Money), used to "purchase" things in her defined world. It meant one less thing to her, but was worth it for Him. That's what it cost.

What has it cost you? She was always good with music and children. She taught them melodies and techniques, theory and style, pitch and harmony. But one day she decided her occupation would expand. She would still teach above all, but she would also become a nurse, an executive, a counselor and confidant. She mastered art and sciences, and could always find the best places to hide and never be found. She would still do all these things and more for children, but only two, her two; our two. It meant one less accolade from the world, one less paycheck for the home, one less recognition of prestige. But it meant two more souls for Him. That's what it cost.

What has it cost you? His vision is dimmed and his hearing has dulled. His smile is still bright and his handshake still bold. The therapy takes so much energy and strength, irony of the aide to battle the illness. He continues to work, to pray, to push, to press, to place his feet at his post, the corner, you know the corner, in the foyer, by the doors.

SHARING HEAVEN
IN 2011

His was the first hand I ever shook, probably you could say the same too. It means one less moment to rest, one less hour to sleep, one more day to push, just to shake your hand; your son's hand, who when he hear's the words "Mr. Al is sick" instantly says, "He's the one who shakes my hand." That's what it cost.

Can you find another meaning for sacrifice? Maybe there is one that does not become so personal, is not so pervasive and will not be so pricey. Sacrifice has become so invasive, so insistent, and so inconvenient. Surely service without sacrifice is more appropriate in a modern world. At the heart of the word sacrifice you find the formula, "ifi" more appropriately, "if-i." If I surrender what would supply my soul for the moment, just so I could sacrifice that moment for Him...If I share my talent exclusively for others, just so I could sacrifice that talent for Him...If I stay my course here, no matter the pain or the pressure, the distress or the discomfort; just to sacrifice myself for Him, what has it cost? One less possession, one less paycheck, one less passing nap? What has it cost? I hope you know.

Spotlight on Leaders...

For the next few weeks, we will be spotlighting our Deacons and their families to show our appreciation for the work. This week, we are featuring...

Wayne & Carolyn Chessor

Wayne & Carolyn Chessor live at 160 Cedar Park Drive in Centerville, Tennessee. Wayne serves on the Missions Ministry and the Vision Ministry.

THE LAST COUPLE OF WEEKS... seem like a whirlwind at this point. Gatlinburg two weeks in a row was something I hadn't done before. It was however, an amazing experience. Our Sr. Spotlight this weekend was another one full of memories, laughter, fellowship, and spiritual dedication. Our theme this year was somewhat of a unique one. Our discussion revolved around "The Social Network." Statistics revolving around internet use and social networking are simply staggering. Studies show that it took 38 years before there were 50 million radios in use. It took 14 years before 50 million televisions were in use. In just 9 months, Facebook had exceeded 100 million users. I'm not the brightest star in the sky, but something tells me that websites such as Facebook are not just a fad, here today and gone tomorrow. These social networks have become a vital part of businesses, society, and many personal lives. I'm not saying that I believe this is a good thing necessarily, but I am saying that it's here to stay. Facebook is like so many different "tools" that has come about in the last several years. Much like we often do, we seem to take something that could be a wonderful tool and we turn it into something negative. It seems as though Facebook is used more for breaking up marriages, gossiping, condemning, and spreading lies than it is for any positive purposes. Our discussion this week was about how we can use the internet and social networking tools to glorify God. If we have 400 or 500 friends on Facebook, how can we be a shining light for those people? Tools such as this are only negative when we use them in a negative way. We mistake Facebook as a way of interacting with people and substitute it for real one on one communication. If we understand better that by spending our time wrapped up in the fantasy world of the internet, the real world that we live in with real relationships might just pass us by. Facebook is a tool to network with people, it's not a way of life, it's not a world that we can live in and be whoever we want to be. I want to say a special thank you to all of our adults who went this week on the retreat: Mark and Shela Chessor, Chris and Cyndi Hughes, Warren and Tammy Potts, Patrick Allen, Melody Skelton, Erin Webb, Kay Gonzales and Patsy Dillard. Weekends like this help us to see just a glimpse of what Heaven will be like. It's an amazing feeling to be surrounded by people that you love, worshipping our creator! May we use everything that lies before us in such a way that God is glorified in EVERYTHING that we do! After all, pleasing Him is the only thing that really matters! Light the Way-Chris
